Photoshop can be a tool that enables new trends, such as using textures that were not as common previously (e.g., by applying textures from a variety of stock photography sources). Starting a photo shoot Photographs are unique, and not much in the digital world can replicate that. Because of the uniqueness of photographs, photographers must put significant thought and preparation into a photo shoot. Following are some tips for new photographers who have just bought a digital camera or a digital camera with a built-in memory card reader. 1. Preparation: An important part of digital photography is the settings you may choose to make. When you are shooting, whether with a digital camera or a film camera, you must think about your choice of settings. The settings you choose allow the scene to appear in the best way. When choosing settings, ask yourself the following questions: a. What do you want to capture — color, clarity, clarity with blur, or a photo that brings together these elements? If you've never shot film, you probably want color. If you've shot a lot of digital images, you probably want clarity. If you've used a variety of settings, you probably like blurring, as seen in Figure 7-1. Figure 7-1: Staying with a standard or automatic mode when shooting will offer you the most options. b. What shutter speed do you want? Shutter speeds between about 1/30 second and 1/100 second (e.g., 1/30, 1/60, 1/80, 1/125, and so on) are usually available in many digital cameras. You can also use the program's Auto mode. For more about shooting digital photography, see Chapter 11. 2. Develop your photos: After shooting your photos, you must process them. Before you begin processing your photos, you must examine your photos, select some to be kept, and discard others (if they aren't of the best quality). Before you process your photos, make sure your images are clean, meaning that the images are free of dust, lint, or other dust particles. It's also a good idea to clean the lens or remove any dirt on the lens with a lens cleaning fluid. If you don't take the time to clean the lens or the camera lens before processing, you may get blurry images or images that look a bit messy. After you shoot your images, keep those that are

Enlarge By Brent Lewis, The Oklahoman KITTY HAWK RINGS: TULSA, Okla. For almost three decades, the U.S. and Iran have been locked in an undeclared conflict over Tehran's pursuit of nuclear weapons. A decade of debate, diplomacy and, finally, sanctions have done little to slow it down. Now a U.S.-funded missile defense system called the "Arrow," made by Israeli arms exporter Rafael, has been installed in the Persian Gulf to protect oil platforms and other sensitive installations from a possible Iranian missile attack. Sen. Jim Inhofe, R-Okla., says the military and political costs of sending the missiles to the gulf is too high. "There are fewer consequences of keeping (missile defense) in Europe," he says, citing the Libya and Iraq conflicts, "but the consequences of keeping it here are extremely serious." An American cyclist, Bradley Manning, has been charged with 20 counts of Espionage Act for allegedly providing secret information to WikiLeaks about U.S. military operations in Iraq and Afghanistan and the State Department and Pentagon's diplomatic dealings. Manning was arrested in 2010 and charged with leaking thousands of classified documents that included the 'Iraq War Logs' as well as diplomatic cables and army reports. Steven Dettelbach, a US prosecutor handling Manning's case, said "The arrest and charging decision has not been made to determine guilt or innocence." He added the government was concerned that releasing the information would damage US national security. "We don't know who the individual in question is, what his motivations might be, whether he is a confidential source or source of some other information," he said. "We don't know what the information is because he has not provided it to us." Bradley Manning is currently being held in a maximum security military prison in Quantico, Virginia. "He is not permitted to have any connection with the outside world; he has not been allowed to talk to anybody," Dettelbach added. One of the leaked US diplomatic cables released by WikiLeaks in November last year revealed the Iraqis used chemical weapons against the United States-led coalition forces in the war. Manning is facing 22 counts under the Espionage Act, including the charge of 'aiding the enemy'. There were also allegations that Manning was involved in attempts to hack into the US Army Central database. Manning denied the charges. Speaking to ABC News, attorney Paul Farrell said: "This is not the end for Bradley Manning." He added: "The evidence will come out, the truth will come out, whether it be on his behalf or on the governments behalf." Rajiv Chandran, one of the London-based lawyers of WikiLeaks, said the organization had received a request from Manning to be charged with additional crimes. "He is not allowed to have any contact with the outside world; he has not been allowed to talk to anybody," Dettelbach said of the soldier. "He has been held in solitary confinement conditions for the last 60 days." The Obama administration has condemned the leak, which it said put "the lives of our troops,
